

DE LA MAZA MANOR HOUSE (CON DA ROMAÍÑA TRAIL)

Located in the small valley of Santa Eulalia (Nantes), the Pazo da Maza was one of the manor houses owned by the Maza family in the former jurisdiction of A Lanzada. Composed mostly of scribes and writers, the first records of the family date back to the 17th century, when Alonso de la Maza y Pereira married into the family of the Lords of Coto de Dorrón (family Bermúdez de Aldao). It was in this century that King Charles II appointed the Maza family Counts of Taboada (1683).

The Pazo is said to be over three hundred years old and has a rectangular floor plan, very typical of the architecture of Galician manor houses. It features a staircase on each side of the main façade with a single door providing access to the first floor. Notable elements include the granary, the mill, and the coat of arms.

The granary, rectangular and elongated, is built on seven pillars and could be classified as a specific type of granary of this area (O Salnés). The chamber is entirely made of wood and the roof, as it is typical of its kind, is tiled and gabled with a longitudinal ridge.

The quartered coat of arms is located on the north wall and corresponds to the arms of the Fociños, Coutiño, Luaces, and de la Maza families, according to Vázquez Casáis. Adorned with mantling, it is surmounted by a nobleman's helmet with a plume and flanked by a female figure on each side holding a mace, possibly a reference to the family's surname (Maza means mace in Spanish).

The north side of the manor house is accessed via two elevated entrances, each with a stone staircase attached to the wall. Between them is the heraldic coat of arms carved into the granite stone.

The size of the granary, with seven pillars, indicates significant agricultural production and, consequently, the wealth and importance of the manor house.
